Rural AIDS cases:
Numbers are increasing in Tennessee, experts say

Although reports indicate that the prevalence of AIDS and HIV-infection is down somewhat in Tennessee's urban centers, more and more cases are being diagnosed in the state's rural areas.

During a meeting in Knoxville last month, experts said that between 1987 and 1989, the number of new AIDS cases found in rural areas increased by some 50 percent, compared to a 15 percent increase for the entire state. Speaking at a meeting of the Tennessee Medical Association, Bernie Ellis, then an AIDS expert for the state department of health and environment, said that although the numbers of diagnosed cases has increased, the small numbers make establishing a trend near impossible.

Ellis resigned his position with the state in late April, citing a hiring freeze in state government as reason for his resignation.

Figures compiled through February, 1990, indicate that about half of the people with AIDS in Tennessee live in Shelby and Davidson counties. At least 20 other Tennessee counties have reported at least five cases.

"Things have changed dramatically," said Felix Sarubbi, chief of infectious diseases at Johnson City's East Tennessee State University. Sarubbi told Dare the number of people with AIDS living in the state's capital city has been "unbelievable" and "increased a couple of years later.

Periodic reports indicate that about half of the people with AIDS in Tennessee live in Shelby and Davidson counties. At least 20 other Tennessee counties have reported at least five cases.

"Things have changed dramatically," said Felix Sarubbi, chief of infectious diseases at Johnson City's East Tennessee State University.

It has been "impossible," Sarubbi told Dare the number of people with AIDS living in the Tri-Cities area has grown from seven in 1984 to 49 in 1989.

MSU students reorganize SGALA
Gay/lesbian group back in business after nearly a decade of inactivity
by VICTORIA MIKLOSKEY
Staff Writer

Joining the ranks of gay/lesbian support groups on Tennessee university campuses is the newly-reorganized Students for Gay and Lesbian Awareness (SGALA) at Memphis State University.

The group, headed by president David Burton, a Memphis State graduate student, was originally chartered in the late '70s, but languished a couple of years later. After a decade of inactivity, the group applied for reorganization under its old charter and official re-recognition by the University's administration came during the latter part of spring semester, 1990.

Reaction to the group has been positive. According to Burton, the Memphis State administration has been "quite supportive" and SGALA boasts a membership of almost 50 after only a few meetings.

Although still in the organization stages, the group is growing and will continue to meet during summer semester, Burton said.

When asked what role the group would play on the Memphis State campus, Burton responded that the founders had very different ideas on the direction SGALA would take in the future.

"We're not a social organization," cautioned Burton. "We want to provide a non-threatening atmosphere in which people can meet and talk openly about their sexuality."

For details about SGALA, call Burton at (901) 272-3442.

Baptists enraged by Bush inclusion of lesbians/gays
from STAFF REPORTS

The Nashville-based Southern Baptist Convention's Christian Life Commission director said last week that President Bush's inclusion of lesbian/gay leaders at the signing ceremony for the federal hate crimes legislation is "inconsitent with [Bush's] attempts to appear pro-family."

Richard Land last week said that "The White House can't walk both sides of the street. They can't be seen as both pro-family and pro-homosexual."

Land called upon evangelicals to write the White House and protest the inclusion of lesbian/gay leaders. Land contended that Southern Baptists, too, oppose hate crimes.

T-GALA names new executive and development directors

The Nashville-based Tennessee Gay and Lesbian Alliance (T-GALA) this week hired Penny Campbell as its new executive director and Debra Alberts as director of programs and development.

Additionally, the Gay and Lesbian Lives in Progress (GALLIP) gay and lesbian switchboard and the One in Teen group for gay and lesbian teenagers will now be merged into T-GALA.

"We are very pleased to have this opportunity to hire two such experienced and talented people to direct the agency," said Gregory Fisher, co-chair of T-GALA. "The merger of GALLIP and One in Teen with T-GALA will further broaden the scope of services and activities of T-GALA, and make the agency even more responsive."

Abby Rubenfeld, T-GALA co-chair, said that the addition of staff and new programs fit very well into the future plans for the agency.

"Right now T-GALA is on the move and has a lot of momentum, especially after being so effective in impacting the recent political races. We want to make sure we do not lose that momentum and by bringing on staff members and expanding services we will become even more effective."

Penny Campbell brings with her the position of executive director experience within a number of community agencies.

"We are pleased to be able to strengthen the organization and increase the visibility of T-GALA. We also hope to immediately help make T-GALA more accessible and a more visible force within the community," Campbell said.

Health Department selects MGLCC as HIV test site

In an effort to reach more people at risk for HIV infection, the Memphis/Shelby County Health Department has designated the Memphis Gay and Lesbian Community Center as an alternative testing and counseling site in addition to testing at the Health Department.

Testing is offered every Wednesday at the Community Center from 5 to 7 p.m. The tests and counseling are free of charge.

According to the Health Department, all test results are confidential with anonymous testing available and recommended for individuals who are not required to share their test results with employers or insurance agencies.

“Confidential” means that an individual’s test results are given in writing only to that person, whose identity must be verified. Anonymous testing means not even the Health Department need know your real name and results are not written. Tests will take two weeks to process.

Health Department staff will also provide pre- and post-test counseling to explain to individuals the meaning of their HIV status, the proper use of condoms and other safe sex behaviors.

Appointments are preferred, but walk-ins will be accommodated if time permits. For details call (901) 576-7866.

The Tennessee Dance Theatre will present their enormously popular Ultrajazz concert again at the Ace of Clubs, May 18 at 7:30 p.m. First presented last October to sold out crowds, Ultrajazz recreates the world of the "black and silver, uptown Saturday night." Joining the dancers will be: Beegie Adair, Stan Tucker, Kenny Malone, Craig Nelson, Cindy Reynolds Wyatt, Tim Hulbert and vocalist Darlene Shadden.

Tickets are $10 and are available through Ticketmaster or call Tennessee Dance Theatre at (615) 248-3262.

Best of Tennessee crafts exhibit at the Parthenon

The Best of Tennessee crafts is currently on exhibit through June 16 in the central gallery of the Parthenon.

The show is presented by the Tennessee Association of Craft Artists (TACA) to celebrate its 25th anniversary.

Testing is offered every Wednesday at the Community Center from 5 to 7 p.m. The tests and counseling are free of charge.

According to the Health Department, all test results are confidential with anonymous testing available and recommended for individuals who are not required to share their test results with employers or insurance agencies.

MCSA action continues; Storm forfeits first game

Sunday's MCSA games at Whitfield Park resulted in two shut-outs, one by the Nashville Numbers and the other by Music City Storm.

Music City Storm broke Juanita's Zippers 22-0 in a four inning game while NashvilleNumbers upended the C.C. Shooters 16-0. In the first game of the day, the Storm trounced the Warehouse Warriors 20-2.

The Storm forfeited its first game of the season to C.C. Shooters because of an ineligible player.

Current season standings: Music City Storm 6-1; Warehouse Warriors 4-2, Nashville Numbers 4-2, Juanita’s Zippers 2-4, and C.C. Shooters 1-6.

Dear Abby rebukes lesbian-baiting mother

Dear Abby rebuked "Mom Forever Sad" in February for whining that she had lost her only daughter to lesbianism after the woman went off to "Lesbian U."

"Young women do not 'become' lesbians as a result of 'bonding' at college or elsewhere," Abigail Van Buren explained.

"The seeds of sexuality are planted much earlier - and there are multiple roots. You need to know much more than I can tell you in a letter, Mom. There is a support group for parents in situations similar to your own, with chapters throughout the country. It's called Parents and Friends of Gays and Lesbians... Please remember that God made gays just as surely as he made 'strights.' "They, too, are God's children and deserve to be understood and loved."

Tulane Law students unveil new gay/lesbian review

The students of Tulane Law School have announced the formation of a new national journal entitled LAW & SEXUALITY: A REVIEW OF LESBIAN AND GAY LEGAL ISSUES.

The first law journal in the country to focus exclusively on homosexuality and the law, LAW & SEXUALITY aims to keep the community informed of legal developments in the area of gay and lesbian rights, as well as to encourage more creativity in analyzing these issues.

The journal will include theoretical and practical articles by academics and practitioners and a "recent developments" section written by students.

LAW & SEXUALITY will initially be published on a yearly basis beginning in June 1991.

Uncle Charlie's hit by pipe bomb; three injured

Uncle Charlie's, New York's most well known gay bar, was stricken by a pipe bomb just after midnight Saturday morning, April 28.

The bomb was filled with M-80 firecrackers with an equivalent explosive power to a 1/4 stick of dynamite. Two patrons and one employee were injured in the explosion. Police investigators have ruled out possible anti-gay bias in the bombing, leaving much of the gay community outraged.

Mayor David Dinkins spoke out about the crime and contradicted the police department's version of the incident and referred to the bombing as bias-related.

Fund for Human Dignity hires straight man

The Fund for Human Dignity, a national gay and lesbian educational organization, announced last week that it has hired Robert Brading, a straight man with no experience in gay and lesbian issues, as the organization's executive director.

Subsequent acting director Gary Henderson was fired on the spot and asked to leave immediately on March 23.

A spokesperson for the organization said Henderson was fired because he was responsible for staff insubordination. Three members have since resigned.

Civil rights bill celebrates 15th anniversary

The National Gay and Lesbian Task Force will celebrate the 15th anniversary of the introduction of the federal Gay and Lesbian Civil Rights Bill with a gala reception, June 12.

NGLTF will honor former Congresswoman Bella Abzug, the bill's pioneer sponsor, and Rep. Ted Weiss (D-N.Y.) and Senator Alan Cranston (D-Calif.), the bill's current chief sponsors.

Feminist humorist Kate Clinton will introduce the honorees.

Gay men and lesbians around the country are invited to attend. For information, call Jaime Grant at (202) 332-6483.

NGLTF sets fourth annual national lobby days

The Fourth National Lobby Days, sponsored by the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, will be held in June this year to coincide with gay and lesbian pride events around the country.

The NGLTF Lobby Days are designed to encourage and organize grassroots lobbying in the hopes that the U.S. Congress will pass the federal Gay and Lesbian Civil Rights Bill.

This year's Lobby Days will focus on federal gay and lesbian civil rights legislation and pending Congressional issues, including AIDS funding and housing, National Endowment for the Arts, immigration reform, military, home rule for the District of Columbia, and others.

For more information on National Lobby Days, contact Peri Jude Radecic at (202) 332-6489.

HRCF makes cancer legislation high priority

The Human Rights Campaign Fund will give women's cancer legislation high priority on its advocacy agenda, according to executive director Tim McFeeley.

 Lesbian issues and outreach director Kathleen Stoll explained that cancer is a valid lesbian concern because women who have never had children are at greater risk for certain types of cancer including cervical, ovarian and breast cancer. HRCF plans to work to gain support in Congress for the Breast and Cervical Cancer Mortality Prevention Act of 1990. The act would provide for grants to states for prevention, health screening and referral services.

Persistence of Vision

◊ This tree needs pruning

When people bark up this wrong tree, timber wolves (no kidding) are its minions to dispatch death. Their bite is worse than their bark, and they have at a dummy or two.

The parents, played by Dwier Brown and Carey Lowell (access to kill), finally get hip to the lay of the land, but Friedkin casts the mother as oddly distant and literally sleeping through threats to her newborn child.

Here, the father mothers the child.

In THE GUARDIAN, Friedkin goes way out on a limb with trees that eat babies.

I'm sorry, but the premise is so far-fetched that it simply isn't scary.

This tree has no depth or nature.

In another false vein to satiate the audience, the nanny is caught bathing by the father. Later he has an explicit, steamy sexual encounter with his wife in the nursery. The tree has no depth or nature. Sure, sure it drags people through the dirt, and drives stakes through their chests, but who is the spirit of this tree?

In actor's parlance, the tree should have asked, "What's my motivation in this film? What are my roots?"

In the beginning, we get some druid mumbo jumbo about spirits in trees — some bad, some good. storia Seagrove (local hero, appointment with death) is introduced as a nanny who doubles as a druid priestess. She also fetches food in the form of infants for the monster trunk to taste.

In a stroke of incongruous, unseemly timing, director William Friedkin (THE BOYS IN THE BAND, THE EXORCIST, THE FRENCH CONNECTION, CRUISING, TO LIVE AND DIE IN L.A.) has delivered a paean against trees released the week of Earth Day.

The more I think about THE GUARDIAN, the more I hate it. In fact, I want to tear this misogynist monster limb from limb.

Horror really works best when it stems from a core of human experience or apprehension. Creepy cousins closer to our own psyches are scarier because anthropocentric as we are, our sap rises when issues stem from our reality.

Horror can branch out from other worlds, but effective horror needs a face upon which to fix our fears. Poltergeist with its mistreated dead spirits, alien with its maternity run amok, and the exorcist with green and gruesome Linda Blair were successful for this reason.

In THE GUARDIAN, however, Friedkin goes way out on a limb with trees that eat babies.

I'm sorry, but the premise is so far-fetched that it simply isn't scary. This tree has no depth or nature. Sure, sure it drags people through the dirt, and drives stakes through their chests, but who is the spirit of this tree?

In actor's parlance, the tree should have asked, "What's my motivation in this film? What are my roots?"

In the beginning, we get some druid mumbo jumbo about spirits in trees — some bad, some good.

Jenny Seagrove (local hero, appointment with death) is introduced as a nanny who doubles as a druid priestess. She also fetches food in the form of infants for the monster trunk to taste.

In THE GUARDIAN, Friedkin goes way out on a limb with trees that eat babies.

I'm sorry, but the premise is so far-fetched that it simply isn't scary.

This tree has no depth or nature.

In another false vein to satiate the audience, the nanny is caught bathing by the father. Later he has an explicit, steamy sexual dream about her. Neither of these are really necessary to the plot; they are purely gratuitous to show Seagrove's breasts on camera.

Jenny Seagrove has a staring screen persona.

In this she is oddly present and absent, just as she was in her mermaid-lab technician role in LOCAL HERO. I wish she'd get more work that Laughter isn't scary.

He still has cinematic style. Even the garbage can get a point of view shot with trash heading its way for no apparent purpose.

The threatened infant sees the world through a fish-eye lens, a nice gimmick, but this camera trick isn't consistently used.

The sound track is thick with exaggerated wind and woods noises.

There's a night running sequence that reminds you of the times when, as a child, you could spook yourself just from feeling the pounding in your body and hearing your own hyperventilation in the dark wellness of the out of doors.

The somewhat silly climax involves a diphtheria, back in night fight, a chain saw, and 500 gallons of blood. "Woodman, don't spare that tree!"

Some will say THE GUARDIAN is "just a movie," not to be taken too seriously, but I say the real seed of THE GUARDIAN is a distrust of Mother and all her earthly and female forms.

Go for a walk in the woods and skip this travesty. Leave it for the termites.

Don't Be Alone!

There is a lot about the Chaffin's Barn production of Ray Cooney's RUN FOR YOUR WIFE to recommend it to prospective audience members. It's terribly funny, the action clips along at an almost breakneck pace, and the actors are all ingenious and enormously likable.

Unfortunately, the British farce, transported from the London stage where it's been playing for the past three years, features one of the most offensive and stereotypical gay characters ever seen on stage.

And although I found myself laughing at some of his antics, the character only reinforces many of the prejudicial beliefs too many people have held for generations.

That said, perhaps now I can concentrate on what was really good about the show: wonderful individual performances by a group of remarkably quick-witted actors.

Cooney's farce tells the slightly implausible story of a London taxi driver named John Smith who, for the past several years, has had two wives -- Barbara lives in Streatham, Mary in Wimbledon. His duplicity has gone on without much incidence, but because John's such a nice guy (and he intervenes when a woman is being mugged), his cover is about to be blown thanks to the media attention paid to his heroics.

With all the time-honored basics of the British farce, RUN FOR YOUR WIFE features all manner of crazy events, havebrained schemes and near-misses. Directed by Michael Edwards, the action is almost non-stop. Edwards might best be described as a traffic cop, what with the lunacy unleashed on the Chaffin's Barn stage.

John is played engagingly by Clyde Cash, brimming with charm and good-natured sweetness. Mary is played by the always-watchable Donna Wright and Marian Murphy claims the role of Barbara. Both women are delightful, although their accents seem to come and go.

The problem of here again-again accents seems to plague most of the cast -- with a couple of exceptions to be sure. As police sergeants investigating the near-mugging, both Sean McGinty and Johnson West sometimes sound more as if they belong in the Bronx than in London. But both men give such winning portrayals, you tend to look past any problems.

But the top acting honors go to Mark Cabus, whose performance as John's upstairs neighbor Stanley is a highly-charged, hilarious tour de force. Cabus is, at one moment, wildly manic and at the other, coolly reserved (but not for long). We've known for quite some time what a talented actor he is, but with this performance, Cabus proves himself to be a superb comic.

As the offensive dressmaker, Bobby Franklyn, Rob Daniel is effective, virtually bringing down the house with his fey portrayal. As funny as he is, though, the role is still downright offensive, but that's more the fault of the playwright than the actor (who is a bit long in the tooth to do the part).

But despite the problems, RUN FOR YOUR WIFE is still an entertaining, if somewhat homophobic, night of theatre.

AIDS in rural Tennessee bringing someone in from outside, to address the needs of AIDS services," said Rita Underhill, education director for the Memphis-based Aid to End AIDS Committee (ATEAC).

Underhill said she believed that the spread of HIV is on the increase in rural areas because "we [ATEAC] are getting more requests for assistance from people who are having to drive a hundred miles to see a doctor in Memphis."

"We need more funding of services and health care in addition to education, and I don't think that has been addressed either on a national or a local level," she said.

Underhill described the level of AIDS services in rural West Tennessee, "between Nashville and Jackson, and Jackson and Memphis" as "no man's land."

Potter said that a conference is scheduled for mid-July in Washington, D.C., for community AIDS workers and health care professionals to discuss, among other topics, ways to deal with the rise of HIV infection in rural America.

The results of the conference will be published nationally in order to focus nationwide attention on these problems, Potter said.

"T-GALA is the voice of so many people and we hope to translate that voice into action. We will be increasing the services and programs offered by T-GALA in the future, as well. In order to do that we will be doing major fund raising and asking for the support, both financially and in volunteerism, from many people," Alberts said.

The decision to hire Campbell and Alberts came during Monday night's meeting of the T-GALA board of directors. The goal of hiring staff members was first announced in late 1989 when the new board was elected.

T-GALA is a service and political organization that has served middle Tennessee's gay and lesbian community since 1978.

Battering is a taboo subject in the gay and lesbian community. You see very little written about it and it is spoken about even less. If you didn't know better, you would think it did not exist within our community.

But that is not the case at all. Gay and lesbian couple battering is at least as common as heterosexual couple battering and possibly even somewhat more prevalent because there is more oppression involved," said Corliss Gober, a Chattanooga counselor.

"The more oppressive a situation is, the greater the potential for maladaptive coping behaviors like battering. It's also talked about less within the gay and lesbian community because gay males and lesbians don't come to treatment settings as frequently or as early as heterosexual couples. This is often based on a prior negative experience with a therapist.

"There is also a lot of denial within the lesbian community that battering exists. It is hard for an avowed feminist to acknowledge that she has taken on the characteristics of the oppressor by battering," Gober said.

According to Nashville counselor Dan Ramey, battering is a taboo subject because people often feel that it is either somehow okay or that it is impossible to stop.

"Many people grew up seeing their mothers being battered and somehow think that it is just a part of relationships. Even if a history of seeing battering does not exist, we in the gay and lesbian community are constantly battered everyday by knowing that the potential exists for someone to call you a queer or fag or whatever, in an aggressive way.

Even if it doesn't actually happen, we know the potential for verbal or physical battering is always there. And often lesbians are mothers as well and run the risk of losing their children if they make waves."

"Gay and lesbian battering is very similar to the battering of women by heterosexual men," Ramey said. "Society sanctions or overlooks the physical, emotional and financial battering of people in certain societal positions. This holds especially true for women and gay and lesbian people. Domestic violence laws are very specific about when and how the police can intervene and state that there must be evidence of physical abuse to act.

"The two most common places for injuries in a battering situation with a woman are the vaginal area and the mouth. The batterer sexually batter and she usually batter and then hits her in the mouth to shut her up so she won't talk back or talk abusively to him.

"THE CONTROL ISSUE is very important in a battering situation, too. The batterer is always trying to maintain control over another person and uses battering to do it and then finds that battering still does not meet that need because no one can totally control another person. So the batterer keeps on battering. He or she de-empowers someone so he/she can be in control.

"This control factor is so strong," Ramey said, "that most women who are killed by their heterosexual partners are killed when they are in the process of leaving or after than have left. The batterer feels that he has lost his ability to control then, so he does something even more violent. The batterer wants to keep the person around to batter.

Although there are similar dynamics between hetero- and homosexual battering, there are some differences that can compound the problem, too.

Ramey said, "Most gay men and lesbians already have some sense of hiding their relationship even if The hurts of gay and lesbian spouse abuse

...they are very out in the community. We often cannot go down the street holding hands or kiss in a restaurant that is not gay. So we develop an internal sense of self protection. Some gay men and lesbians are hiding a sense of guilt or shame about being gay as well. This then may come out as a battering situation to gain some amount of control over the relationship.

Gober said, "There are differences in lesbian couple battering versus heterosexual couple battering. One difference is that in the lesbian relationship, the lover assumes the role of lover, mother, sister, best friend—everything. She often has little or no outside support and it is harder to get out of a battering situation. A heterosexual woman may have those outside support systems in place and it makes it somewhat easier.

"Another difference is the physical strength. In gay male and lesbian battering, you usually have two people of similar physical strength so they are somewhat equals. So what happens is that the batterer has the psychological advantage," Gober said.

Ramey explained, "At the core of battering is the execution of power, control and abuse of another person. Gay and lesbian couple battering has some similar dynamics to heterosexual couple battering and they some additional facets that make it difficult to control."

Chemical dependency within the gay and lesbian community adds further fuel to the flame of battering. Ramey added.

"Chemical abuse certainly does not cause battering, but it may lower the inhibitions of the batterer so he or she goes ahead and batter. Some people also use chemicals, drugs or alcohol, to free themselves enough to vent anger and this may lead to a battering situation."

BATTERING HAS MANY faces in addition to physical assault upon another person.

Ramey said, "Battering is not necessarily just the action of hitting someone or contingent upon the number of times someone is hit. It isn't even a matter of who his first or who is hurt the most. Battering carries with it an emotional, relationship quality that is abusive. I always ask couples in a battering relationship how they feel when battering goes on. Usually the victim feels fear and the batterer feels anger. There's the difference."

"Among several components of battering are physical assault, threat of physical assault, financial exploitation, psychological and emotional abuse, using children, sexual battering and the threat of the batterer to harm himself."

"Psychological abuse includes things like constant denigrating the other person. "You're too fat. My last partner was overweight, you know." Or doing things like stalking or following the victim. It may include threats or the actions of dragging someone out of the closet to their employers, landlords, parents or children."

"Using children in a battering situation is usually more common in lesbian circles. It involves threats or actions telling children about their parents being gay, or telling authorities that the parent is gay, risking custody of the child."

"Sexual battering includes forcible sex, rape, unsafe sexual practices or harassing someone to do something unsafe sexually.

"Financial battering includes exploitation or threats to tell the landlord or that if the victim doesn't do what the batterer wants, they will find their clothes out in the street, or stealing from the victim."

"The threat the batterer makes that he will harm himself if the victim doesn't do what he wants is also battering. They may say, "If you don't come back, I'll kill myself." This is very controlling."

"If someone is being battered, Ramey said that it is important first, to understand that the batterer, not the victim, is the problem."

"People want to make excuses for the batterer. They may say that because he was drunk, or high, or if I didn't antagonize him or if I did what he wanted, I wouldn't be battered. This is wrong."

"Make the batterer responsible for his or her own actions. He or she needs the consequences to acknowledge what he is doing. Exposing the batterer minimizes the effects of what he is doing. In my experience, it usually takes an outside force to make a batterer come to realize the problem. I have never had a batterer come to treatment solely on his own. Usually there was a consequence that forced him to seek help."

Addressing some difficult questions

by CARLTON CORNETT
Contributing Writer

Some of the most common questions that lesbians and gay men ask concern relationships. In the heterosexual world there are role models (although often unhealthy role models) to use as guides in developing and maintaining relationships. Lesbians and gay men have few socially sanctioned relationship modes; in fact, the primary message that lesbians and gay men receive from society is that they are incapable of maintaining an intimate relationship.

There are a number of reasons that this image is fostered by heterosexual society, including a need for lesbians and gay men to be seen as different from straight people ("If they're just like us what does that mean about us?" response).

Another reason for the reinforcement of this image is the promulgation of a mythic image of heterosexual relationships -- lifting romance for the most critical part of research, it is a myth that dies hard. When it comes to relationships, lesbians and gay men are often charting a course through unknown seas. Questions asked about relationships often involve an attempt to chart the potential rocks.

I just realized that I am only attracted to "straight" men. What's wrong with me?

Nothing's wrong. That's the first important thing to realize about relationships of whatever persuasion, there are no "rights" or "wrongs."

It is more helpful to think in terms of "Am I meeting my needs in this way?" The phenomenon of being lesbian or gay and attracted occasionally to straight women or men is not uncommon. After all, there are some very attractive straight people. When we meet straight people who are open, accepting and loving there is a natural attraction. Add to that personality some physical beauty and the attractions probably increases.

By the way, many straight people often find themselves attracted to lesbians or gay men for the same reason. So, attractions to a straight woman or man may just show good taste.

Another reason that lesbians or gay men are often attracted to "straight" women or men may have more to do with the "straight" person than the gay one.

We all send out unconscious communication to each other constantly. This takes place through our body language, our choice of words, our timing or words and myriad other ways.

One phenomenon that often underlies the attraction of someone gay to someone straight is confusion on the latter's part. We can often pick up this person's unconscious communication that she/he is confused and our attraction may then be an unconscious way of offering to help her/him work that confusion out.

There are other reasons that one might be attracted to straight people. If one is attracted solely to straight people it may mean several things. There are two common reasons for this pattern.

First, it may mean that there is a difficulty with intimacy present; being attracted to people unavailable to us certainly regulates how much closeness and intimacy we achieve. Put simply, there are a lot of people, gay, straight and bisexual, who are frightened of closeness.

If you've grown up in a household where you learned that to be close means to be hurt, you probably don't want to continue repeating that cycle. So, the best people to be attracted to (at least in terms of their safety) are those who are available. Safety is important. Before we can do anything else in our lives we must feel physically and emotionally safe.

However, what prompts the questions is a desire to move beyond just safety to fulfillment. To do this may require some help from a professional.

Another possible reason for sole attraction to homosexual people may be a form of internalized homophobia. If, on some level, we are guilty, ashamed or frightened of our sexuality then we may seek out unavailable partners to emotionally punish ourselves or to prevent ourselves from acting on our sexuality.

Our unconscious reasons that if we do not act out our orientation through sex then we may not have to completely accept our identity as a lesbian or gay man. Again, this is an issue which may require some help to work out.

My lover wants me to meet her family and get to know them. I'm a little scared of that — is my discomfort normal?

Meeting in-laws is generally a little anxiety producing. It helps if there is open communication between all parties about the relationship (the parents in question know that their daughter/son is bringing home a lover rather than a "guest" or "friend").

If there is not overt communication about the relationship then there is the added tension of attempting to maintain a front as to the nature of the relationship.

Other issues that present themselves on visits to in-laws include: jealousy (when your lover chooses to share family feelings over yours by pointing out that you'll "be glad to sleep in separate bedrooms"), competition with your lover's parents about where loyalty is to lie (this can be inflamed by statements from your lover such as "Sure I'll be here for Christmas") and, most of all, self-doubts about whether you'll be liked.

These are not insurmountable problems, provided that you and your lover talk about them. If you share your anxiety and ask for reassurance when you need it, the experience will be a much more pleasant one. One other thing worth bearing in mind is that your lover carries around her (or his) parents in her head as we all do (our parents form a very important part of our unconscious and shape our values, ideals and conscience. If you passed with that set of parents (which obviously you have or your lover would not be your lover) you have passed the most critical test.

There are also some positives to visiting in-laws. Here is an opportunity to do some observation about the kind of environment in which your lover developed. It can give you a great deal of information about how her values, tastes and idiosyncrasies were shaped. In other words, it may give you a new way to look at your lover's annoying little quirks, habits and defenses.

Seeing the environment from which your lover grew may give a new perspective on old and bothersome problems like why your lover hates it when you joke about her weight (because her father makes numerous references to her body size and his pet names for her are "dumping" and "pumpkin").

The potential for growth is present in trips to meet with your lover's family if you and your lover communicate and you're open to the experience as a way of learning more about your lover.
“If it’s in the ‘Enquirer’...”

— Former Playboy male nude model (and sometime porn star) Paul Barresi, revealing, “In a world exclusive, a national magazine interviewer the image-smashing story of his two-year affair with Travolta.”

Hell, they even copyrighted this one.

“His was a little shower the first time he met Travolta. The star was lunching with actress Debra Winger when he spotted Barresi outside the restaurant — and while Debra waited, John followed him into a health club and arranged a date...while Barresi was stark naked in the shower...They started a sizzling affair that night — and John paid him the going rate for a day’s work in a porn movie, $400, each time they got together.

“Travolta and Barresi had sex ‘dozens of times’ during the two years, while John carried on romances with Winger, Olivia Newton-John and Superman Mariliu Henner — and he once had Barresi leave a Hawaiian love nest just before Mariliu’s arrival.

“John often talked about the three glamorous stars while in bed with Barresi — and said Debra was a laugh-a-minute, Olivia the sweet, motherly type... and Mariliu the ‘sexiest woman in the world’.

“The star like to listen to lurid details of Barresi’s sexual conquests on porn screens and off and even called him for ‘phone sex’ — having Barresi tell him sexy stories that turned him on.

“Travolta admitted he had a ‘big crush’ on Burt Reynolds — and had Barresi arrange a meeting with another male porn star!

Dallas’ new book SISTER MIDNIGHT’S CAFE, in the May 4 ISSUE OF ENTERTAINMENT WEEKLY.

“For reasons which we may never fully understand, Ryan’s life was set on a course that no one could predict and which we could do so precious little to affect...We owe it to Ryan to make sure that fear and ignorance that chased him from his home and school will be eliminated. We owe it to Ryan to open our hearts and minds to those with AIDS. We owe it to Ryan to be compassionate, caring and tolerant toward those with AIDS, their families and friends.”

— Former president Ronald Reagan, eulogizing Ryan White in the WASHINGTON POST.

“Here you’ve got somebody who did nothing to help (Ryan White) when he was president now suddenly rallying in talk about compassion.’ I think its absolutely egregious hypocrisy and Ronald Reagan should be ashamed of himself.”

— Journalist Randy Shilts (author of AND ME) in the WASHINGTON POST op-ed tribute to Ryan White. Reagan opposed legislation proposed by his own AIDS commission that would have banned the kind of discrimination faced by White.

“To be part of something where, just like in Tour of Duty, life and death circumstances are an everyday occurrence is rare.”

— Actor Stephen Caffrey, commenting on his role in the film LONGTIME COMPANION — about the effects of the AIDS epidemic on a group of gay male friends — to us magazine. The brief article is quick to note that Caffrey (late of ALL MY CHILDREN) met his girlfriend Ten Carrera doing the CBS Vietnam war series TOUR OF DUTY. His publicist, we feel certain, would have approved. We, on the other hand, weren’t impressed. We have “girlfriends” ourselves. Yessiree, boboblinko!
