The institute’s work is intended to benefit Sedgwick clients, business partners and colleagues, as well as the recipients of services administered by Sedgwick, regulators and the general public. Deepening our understanding of the mechanisms and process components of the risk and benefits space will enable us to better serve our clients and take care of injured and ill workers and other consumers the way they want to be treated.

- An intern would be working directly with Chris Mandel, the director of Sedgwick Institute.
- Conducting and publishing research
- Developing forums for information-sharing and assessment
- Forging partnerships with organizations whose missions align with our strategic interests, both in the short and long term
- Advocating for and shaping state and federal legislation affecting industry stakeholders
- Driving innovation that improves outcomes for the various industry segments
