Agency History/Biographical Sketch:

Kelley Anderson was inspired to organize the Southern Girls Rock and Roll Camp after teaching guitar at the Portland, Oregon-based Rock 'n' Roll Camp for Girls in 2002. The SGRRC camp was designed to empower young women of Middle Tennessee through music. The camp was originally a joint program between the feminist student organization “Women for Women of Middle Tennessee State University” and the June Anderson Women’s Center. In 2006, Kelley Anderson, Anna Fitzgerald, Courtney Sharp, Andrew Jacks, Ryan York, and Nicole Tekulve founded YEAH! (Youth Empowerment through Arts and Humanities, Inc.), a nonprofit charitable youth arts organization based in Murfreesboro, Tennessee. YEAH! headquarters then became the home base of the SGRRC.

The camp occurs in the summer and usually consists of five days of classes followed by a showcase on the sixth day. Students take classes in instrument instruction, in which a student may choose between guitar, bass, vocals, keyboard, or drums. Students also attend a workshop in either zine (fanzine) making, songwriting, DIY arts and crafts, screen printing, photography, recording, hip hop performance and theory, or “Music HERstory”. Camp ends with a graduation ceremony and a final showcase.

Scope and Content:

This collection consists of four boxes of materials which include promotional materials, published materials (newspaper clippings, press articles), and institutional records (2003-2014), all of which details the history of the Southern Girls Rock and Roll Camp. These materials were created and donated by the SGRRC institution and YEAH!.

In the absence of a true original order, the collection is arranged into 4 series by nature of materials and organized within each box by date. The box lists below are not comprehensive, but most accurately depict the contents list as of January 2014.
